Abstract

Introduction: Without doubt, contemporary communication technology represents one of the main mechanisms that played and is still playing a very important role in the contemporary international development. It would not be exaggerated to say that communication technology generally - and the internet specifically - played a central role in giving a boost to the shapes of human communication, which surpasses the geographical boundaries of states and the known surveillance methods. In addition, it expanded the already diverse fields of knowledge. We, as humans, live now under an umbrella of an information and communication revolution, which is characterized by the numerous methods of communication that have to do with modern public communication that is present in modern inventions such as the radio, TV, telegraph, fax, and others.
