

The Future of Democratisation in the Arab World: Egypt as a Case Study

Sarra Moneir

Assistant Lecturer of Political Science

Abstract

The article was published as an online version on the magazine website of Austrian Forum for Foreign Policy, United Nations in Vienna-Austria. The main aim of the article was to provide an overall analysis of why the Arab world is slowly moving towards democracy since the political systems are already decayed. The prime scenario given was that the only way to reach a democratic transition is through a strong and earthshattering social revolt, that ultimately result into a cultural dimension shift from passivity to active participation and awareness as well as the breaking of the fear of whatever is superior.

- 2010, January